1) What would you say makes your jurisdiction great?
Prince William County is unique in Northern Virginia in that even though it has over 400,000 residents, it still maintains a very friendly, small-town atmosphere. To be sure, the county is urbanizing; however, as it grows, it has done a very good job of preserving its historical resources, parks and open spaces, and rural areas to the west. As such, the county offers high end dining and retail amenities, while still giving residents the opportunity to enjoy the outdoors or cultural resources in their own backyard. We are also far enough away from the "hustle and bustle" of DC and the urban core, yet close enough to be able to enjoy visiting these areas.

This dynamic gives Prince William County residents the best of all worlds. For example, my wife and I can go to a winery in Haymarket, a restaurant in Occoquan, or go hiking in Prince William Forest Park on a Saturday--all within Prince William County. And the very next day, we can take the kids up to D.C. to visit the museums or the zoo. In short, Prince William County offers the best of city life, rural life, and suburban life.

In addition to the amenities, Prince William is also a safe community with great schools and friendly people. It has so much to offer young families and that's why I am glad that my own family has chosen to make this community our home.
